The second-generation Nexus 7 was released to much fanfare in 2013, but the media-shy manufacturer has yet to bring it back in a form for Google Play. The first generation is still selling on Google's online store with a 2GB model as low as $79, but what will the next Nexus 7 look like? We're going to assume that it will be a 7-inch tablet and that the production run will be huge. Google has only released a handful of Nexuses since the original Nexus 7 launched in 2012, and we're hoping that this new generation will bring a better price point and make it the best tablet to buy. Other than that, we can't guess what this new Nexus 7 will be capable of. It will be on the GSM version of the new Nexus 7 according to rumors, but we don't know when the Motorola-manufactured device will be released. But keep in mind that most likely these new Nexuses will be less than $200, but they'll probably cost $400-$600, so we can expect a significantly higher price. We've heard rumors of the Nexus 7 running on Nvidia's Tegra K1 processor, and we hope that it can handle a resolution of 2560x1600 at its full potential. A
