1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an improved nursing bottle and more specifically to a nursing bottle which allows the user to incline the bottle for convenient access of the nipple, while protecting the nipple from sharp objects. 2. Prior Art A wide variety of nursing bottle designs are presently available. Typically, the nursing bottle is essentially a plastic container having a nipple attached to the exterior and a top portion formed to hold the nipple in a nipple receiving aperture. Numerous different constructions of the bottle and nipple have been developed. However, while each configuration may be useful for some applications, the overall construction is often limited to a specific configuration or intended use. Accordingly, while the construction may be acceptable for the intended use, additional options for enabling a more comfortable way of nursing are often not considered. While the preferred construction of the bottle and nipple combination is that one can nurse without the user holding the bottle and allowing the nipple to freely move about the mouth, it is often desirable to be able to nurse in a variety of positions. Some of these positions include so that the nipple is at an angle which is more comfortable to nurse in and, thus, more desirable. Further, while the nipple is quite effective in allowing a baby to nurse, the nipple is exposed to tearing by sharp objects. For example, the nipple may be exposed to the baby

The study investigated the antidepressant effects of interhemispheric transcranial magnetic stimulation (cTMS) in patients with chronic schizophrenia. A group of 15 inpatients with chronic schizophrenia treated with cTMS in addition to the usual treatment of antipsychotics and antidepressants was compared to a group of 15 patients treated only with the standard of care. The primary measure was the improvement in Positive and Negative Syndrome Scale (PANSS) scores as determined by a blinded rater at baseline and after 6-9 weeks of treatment. Secondary measures included PANSS, PANSS depression scale and symptom items, Beck Depression Inventory, Brief Psychiatric Rating Scale, and CGI-S scores. Repeated measures analysis of variance was performed with a significance level of 0.05. A significant difference was found in improvement of global symptoms and depression on the primary
