Step 1: Download Resetter Software.Q: Issue with structure of a casted pointer I have a structure called Node and a function pointer called myFunc. My code is something like this: Node *root=NULL; myFunc(&root); Also, Node is a structure containing: T *data; int size; Node *next; Both T and Node are defined elsewhere. MyFunc takes a pointer to a node as argument and does whatever it wants with it. So, I want to see what myFunc is doing inside my program. I have tried to do: Node *ptr=root; myFunc(ptr); But, while compiling I get the following error: error: incompatible type for argument 1 of 'myFunc' On reading some other question on stackoverflow, I have tried to cast the pointer returned by root to Node pointer which I will use to pass to myFunc. But, When I do that, myFunc prints garbage values to my screen as if the data pointer were not set to something. For example, if I start with a root node containing the values a, b and c,
